Questions

What is IRBU?

IRBU is Brandon University's Institutional Repository

Its mandate is to:

- ▶ store
- ▶ preserve
- ▶ make visible
- ▶ make openly available

the digital assets of Brandon University

What are digital assets?

A digital asset, in essence, is anything that exists in a binary format and comes with the right to use.

Types of digital assets include, but are not limited to:

- ▶ photographs
- ▶ logos
- ▶ illustrations
- ▶ audiovisual media
- ▶ presentations
- ▶ spreadsheets
- ▶ word documents
- ▶ a multitude of other digital formats and their respective metadata

Digital assets in IRBU

IRBU is designed to collect and provide access to the digital outputs of Brandon University:

- ▶ scholarly
- ▶ educational
- ▶ institutional

It also collects and provides access to:

- ▶ selected archival collections
- ▶ selected BUSU publications

What kinds of materials can be submitted to IRBU?

Examples of scholarly and educational materials:

- ▶ articles
- ▶ conference papers
- ▶ reports
- ▶ theses
- ▶ performances
- ▶ exhibits

Examples of institutional materials:

- ▶ press releases
- ▶ newsletters
- ▶ reports
- ▶ plans
- ▶ calendars
- ▶ BU Art Collection

Things to consider before submitting materials to IRBU

File types and file size:

- ▶ supportable format (i.e. open source)
- ▶ suggested 1 GB maximum
- ▶ IRBU does not store data

Copyright:

- ▶ The work is the original creation of the contributor(s)
- ▶ The contributor must either own the copyright in the work or have explicit, written permission from the copyright holder

Who can submit materials to IRBU?

Members of the Brandon University community:

- ▶ Current and former BU faculty, researchers and employees
- ▶ BU faculties, departments and schools
- ▶ BU research institutes
- ▶ Undergraduate and Graduate students with faculty sponsorship
- ▶ Archival collections are submitted by the University Archivist

Biography

Since 2012, I have been University Archivist (Emeritus) at Brandon University. In practical terms, I am now an independent researcher, writer, documentary producer with many interests – traditional historical and archival practice included – that tend to converge on public history.

The digital revolution has furnished a new terrain for public history and given a new urgency to the need to come to terms with its epistemological nature and practice. I spend lots of time thinking about that, though the ontological nature of self and narrative on the Assiniboine c.1793 is demanding more attention lately.

IRBU Policy

A screenshot of a web browser displaying the IRBU Policy document. The browser's address bar shows the document is 1 of 8 pages. The document title is "IRBU Policy". The content includes an "Introduction" section with three paragraphs: the first defines IRBU as Brandon University's Institutional Repository; the second states it is managed by the IRBU Working Group within the John E. Robbins Library and S.J. McKee Archives; the third notes the group works with relevant stakeholders. The "Content Guidelines" section follows, stating the repository's extensive content type and listing three criteria for collection: scholarly/creative materials, archival value, and full-text items with permission. The browser interface includes standard navigation and zoom controls.

IRBU Policy

Introduction

IRBU is Brandon University's Institutional Repository. Its mandate is to store, preserve, make visible and openly available the scholarly, educational and institutional outputs of the University, as well as selected archival collections.

IRBU is managed by the IRBU Working Group within the John E. Robbins Library and S.J. McKee Archives at Brandon University in accordance with the following guidelines. The IRBU Working Group consists of all BUFA members in the Library and Archives.

The IRBU Working Group will work in conjunction with relevant and interested stakeholders.

These guidelines and procedures are subject to internal review and modification, and are available on the IRBU site.

IRBU upholds academic freedom as defined by the Brandon University Faculty Association Collective Agreement, relevant Brandon University policies and the CAUT Policy Statement on Academic Freedom.

Content Guidelines

The type of content in the repository is extensive:

1. IRBU collects scholarly and creative materials, as well as important documents related to the university's history, in digital format.
2. Archival collections deemed to have research value and/or interest to stakeholders
3. Full-text items are only added to IRBU with the permission of the author/creator, and where permitted under Canadian copyright law.
